Part C: Reading Comprehension

We have money for a number of reasons. It is used as a measure of value, as a means of storing wealth, and for buying and selling goods. Just as meters are used to measure a person's height and kilograms his weight, so money is used to measure the value of his coat, his books, and his bicycle. When we say that money measures the value of an object we are really saying that it measures the value of an object as compared with the value of another; that is, the terms on which they could be exchanged.
