Computers today

Fifty years ago, people didn't use computers very often. They didn't have computers at home and there weren't any laptops or tablets! Can you believe that?

Today, computers are very common. In Britain, most homes have got a computer with an Internet connection – about 80% of all the homes in the country. Most British children can use the Internet at school and many pupils use tablets in class. Children are learning about computers very fast. In Britain, 6-year-old children are often better at using computers than some 45-year-old adults! Some children can use a tablet before they can talk!

British people use the Internet for lots of activities. The most popular activities are email and reading. Many people also play games, watch films and listen to music online. Some people use the Internet to make phone calls and video calls, too.

Now listen and read. Then answer some questions. Then read aloud the text.
